

ECKVILLE U.F.A.

The regular meeting was held in the hall, Friday, 16th, for attendance being present.

A heap of correspondence was dealt with, and among the same was a resolution from the Edmonton Board of Trade asking us for endorsement. This called for the Federal Government to extend the facilities at the coast for handling Alberta and Saskatchewan grain. It also stated the necessity of having elevator and cleaning plant at Edmonton. The resolution was endorsed and the Secretary instructed to mail the three copies to their respective destinations.

The discussion followed the line of a general nature, and evidence of awakening interest of the farmers in this district was not wanting. Five paid their dues and a lot promised to do so in the near future.

The next meeting will be held on the first Sunday in April, which is the first of the season. Ladies who will have a sale of home sewing, the gathering to wind up with a lot of tea.

The place will be at Mr. C. Kasper's store building in town, and it will be at 2 p.m. on the date mentioned. You are all requested to keep this date in mind as no other notice will be given.

PROVINCIAL HOME FOR MENTALLY DEFECTIVE CHILDREN MOVING TO RED DEER

SOLDIERS' HOSPITAL WILL BE TRANSFERRED TO OLIVER NEAR EDMONTON

According to a recent decision of the U.F.A. government, the provincial home for mentally defective children, which has been started on the farm at Oliver, near Edmonton, will not be used for this purpose but will be used instead as the home for mentally disabled soldiers who are now taken care of at Red Deer, the plan being that the institution already started at Oliver will be the nucleus of another asylum for the insane, supplementing the big institution at Ponoka which is already overcrowded.

In accord with this policy it is understood that the mentally deficient children who are now wards of the government, and who are being taken care of in the first unit built last year at Oliver, will be transferred to the hospital at Red Deer now occupied by incapacitated soldiers; the cost of this transfer of patients and the remodeling of the institutions for the purpose being in the vicinity of $10,000. Since the accommodation at the Red Deer institution is said to be restricted, it is thought that the policy of the government will be to limit for time at least the number of mentally deficient children who can be taken care of by the province.

Although no official statement has yet been made in the matter, it is not thought to be the government policy to dispose of the big farm bought some years ago at Oliver for the mentally defective home, and upon which a large sum of money has already been spent, in all probability any further extensions required to take care of the insane will be added to the Oliver plant, a power house and initial administration building being erected last year.

TENT CATERPILLAR INJURY TO TREES AND SHELTER BELTS

The southern part of the Prairie Provinces suffered last summer from a rather severe outbreak of tent caterpillars, poplar bluffs and shade trees being badly defoliated in many places. It is unlikely that the same areas will be quite as severely affected during the coming summer.

The insects causing the injury are the caterpillars, small brownish moths. The moths laid their eggs last summer in ring-like masses about the twigs of poplars and other broad leaf trees, and in some cases scores of these egg-masses may be found on a single tree. Early in the spring, shortly after the poplar buds open, the caterpillars will hatch from the eggs and feed upon the young foliage. When the attack is severe the defoliation may be complete, and although the trees may develop foliage again later in the season, they will be disfigured for a great part of the summer and very considerably weakened by the injury.

The defoliation to shade trees and shelter belts may be prevented by spraying the infested foliage as soon as the young caterpillars appear. Wherever injury is to be expected this year, preparations for spraying should be made in plenty of time, so that the treatment may be applied when it will do the most good.

A suitable pump and a supply of arsenate of lead should be available before the middle of May. A "bucket-pump" will serve for spraying small trees, and a "barrel-pump" with an extension rod can be used effectively on a considerable plantation of trees and towns should employ power sprayers.

Arsenate of lead is the best insecticide for the purpose. It may be obtained in the form of a paste or a powder and should be used at the rate of two and one-half pounds of the paste or one pound of the powder, thoroughly mixed, to forty gallons of water. The powder is to be preferred.

If poplars were defoliated in the neighborhood in 1922, those who have trees to protect should order suitable spraying materials early and arrange to spray their trees at the proper time.

Enquiries should be addressed to the Dominion Entomologist, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. No postage is necessary on such letters. A circular on Tent Caterpillars and their control may be had, free of charge, on application.

RED DEER GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB

In Splendid Financial Position—Plans for 1923

The directors of the Red Deer Golf and Country Club held their first meeting in the office of the Secretary on Tuesday, March 20. The officers for the year elected are:

President—W. B. Payne.
Vice-President—Dr. John Collison.
Secretary—Treasurer—H. B. Maun-

House and Social—Ed. M. Smith, W. A. Moore, E. Greig.

Finance Committee—W. E. Lord, Dr. John Collison, H. B. Maunsel, W. J. Baylis, A. R. Gibson, J. R. McClure.

Membership—H. Willson, H. B. Maunsel, R. R. Wallver.

Kindred Sports—E. G. Johns, Donald Smith, P. E. Graham.

The schedule of fees submitted at the annual meeting of the shareholders was adopted as follows:

Shareholder members, $15.00; Temporary associate members, $15.00; first season players, (men) $15.00; All ladies $15.00. Non-resident associate members, ranging outside five mile limit, men $15.00, ladies $10.00. Juniors, under 18 years, dependents of shareholder or associate members, $5.00; other juniors under 18 years, $14.00. Transferable members, per day, 75c; per week $2.00. Non-resident members, men $2.00; ladies $1.00.

The Club proposed making two tennis courts, the privileges of which are included in the regular fees. Quotations for the season's operations, and as also the intention of the Club to prepare bowling greens, but it is not possible to undertake this work this year.

The question of engaging a semi-professional was fully considered, as well many other important features respecting the season's operations, and as soon as negotiations are completed they will be reported.

The financial report, as submitted to the shareholders at the annual meeting, was very gratifying indeed. The Club has a clear title to the property (89 acres), club house and improvements valued at more than five thousand dollars, with a liability of only five hundred dollars due on the capital account, and it is proposed to sell ten shares to cover this item and to cover the cost of other capital expenditure this year, such as building tennis courts, providing good water at the clubhouse, enlarging the men's locker accommodation, etc.

A telephone will be installed, and in every way it is the intention of the Club to make this the most attractive and complete playground for recreation and the social convenience of the members.

It was decided to have a dance—A Golf Ball—in the Armouries on Thursday, April 12th, the details of which are in the capable hands of the House and Social committee, which has discretion to add to their number as occasion requires, for the putting on of a most enjoyable dance.

The Golf and Country Club has become a great benefit to an increasing number of citizens, and the fees which the Club has asked on for the season are comparatively very reasonable indeed.

ROD AND GUN FOR APRIL

The April issue of Rod and Gun in Canada is the most interesting feature which should instantly recommend it to lovers of the out of doors everywhere. There are a number of articles and narratives portraying experiences and opinions of hunters and sportsmen, among these being "What Are You Going To Do About It?" by W. G. Motley; "Seal Hunting in the Northern Atlantic," by Bonny-cay Dale; "Point Pato-A Public Shooting Ground," and a host of others. There is an account of the annual meeting of the Ontario Hunters Game and Fish Protective Association, dealing with all the matters taken up at the recent convention in Toronto. The department contains some particularly interesting material, and on the whole, the magazine is one of the best numbers yet published.

Rod and Gun in Canada is published monthly at Woodstock, Ontario, by W. J. Taylor, Limited.

THE FRANCO-GERMAN DUEL

The critical situation existing between France and Germany shows no real signs of improvement. The Germans in the Ruhr district continue their policy of passive resistance and isolated acts of defiance and defiance towards the invaders. The French retaliate by arrests, fines, imprisonments and expulsions of prominent German officials, wholesale seizure of cash, a certain amount of plundering of property and a severe control of the population generally. In the meantime this vital industrial centre of Germany has almost ceased to work and produce anything, and the effect of the cessation is being very severely felt all over the rest of Germany, already in a precarious condition in spite of an appearance of temporary prosperity. The occupation is costing France considerable sums of money, but it looks as if it may be slowly reducing Germany to complete ruin. Neither side will yield while they can hold on. The main issue between them remains the same—Germany struggling to avoid the just punishment inflicted on her for her provocation and conduct of the late war, France struggling to inflict such punishment and at the same time to weaken her powerful enemy as to secure herself for the future. One development of the struggle has been the discussion of a general understanding or even an alliance between Italy, France and Belgium. There are considerable difficulties in the way of such an understanding, as the feeling between France and Italy for years has been anything but good. On the other hand all three are, roughly speaking, Latin races with certain similar national characteristics. Their territories are adjacent. The population of Italy is increasing rapidly and has no satisfactory outlet for emigration. France is in great need of additional population. If such an alliance could be made, it would mean that Germany would be faced by a population of over 100 millions, a fact which taken in conjunction with her recent experience of what an aggressive policy of conquest has involved her in, might well serve to curb her definitely and give to Europe something of the rest it needs so badly. A curious feature of such a development would be that it would involve the practical reproduction in modern Europe of the frontiers of the old Roman Empire, when the Rhine formed the barrier against the threatening German tribes. To the student of history this is all very interesting, but it is not something intensely pitiful and sordid about these European squabbles. If one looks at a map of the world, Europe appears on it as a very insignificant fraction. Outside of Europe there are great continents more than half empty, undeveloped, full of unmeasured resources and potential wealth, the development of which might well occupy peacefully the whole energies of mankind, the possession of which may some day cause a life and death struggle, not of countries, but of continents. Yet the nations of Europe amongst whom still lie, or until a few years ago still lay, the focus and centre of the world's power and civilization, are engaged in deadly struggles over a few miles of territory or some historical blood feud. It is not for us to adopt an attitude of complacent superiority to them. Under similar circumstances it is unlikely that we should behave any better ourselves. At the same time it is difficult sometimes not to think of the old story of Alexander the Great, when during the campaign in which he conquered Asia, Minor, Persia and part of India, he received the news of a fierce and bloody battle between two small Greek states. He turned to his staff and said to them: "It seems, gentlemen, that while we have been conquering the world, there has been a battle of frogs and mice in Greece." Will the historian of the future say something of the same sort about this Franco-German struggle?

IMMIGRATION

The recent debates at Ottawa on the question of immigration and the general policy of the government with respect to it are not inspiring. They are characterized by a spirit of overcaution, of rather trivial calculations and of prudence which is akin to pettiness. The suggestion running through them has been that Canada should not bring in immigrants unless there are jobs more or less waiting for them when they arrive. It was not thus that the Empire was founded, or that the Anglo-Saxon race secured its hold on the great territories of the world. The men who could conquer Australia and New Zealand or the United States, had no assurance of safe jobs when they left the shores of Britain. All they knew was that great unoccupied countries lay before them, and that they were prepared to face the difficulties and dangers in the hope of eventually finding there a home for themselves and prosperity for their children. In that spirit they braved the dangers, faced the hardships, and handed down to us the splendid empire we now enjoy. It is impossible that this country should progress at anything like its proper rate unless it receives a large number of immigrants drawn from preference from the British Isles. One has but to look at the history of the growth of the United States to realize this. It is said that the average British town dweller cannot face the difficulties of this mainly agricultural country with its severe climate. That is sheer, unadulterated rubbish. There was a time not more than ten years ago when popular fiction represented that same British town dweller as a weak, anemic person, fit only to dwell in a public-house and watch professional football players perform on Saturday afternoons. The hero of the then current magazine stories of the denizens of the Wild and Woolly West, clad in chaps and buckskins with a belt full of revolvers, draped round him a playboy habit of shooting up towns by way of Sunday afternoon diversion. Yet when the call came the despised British town dweller left his desk and his football, took to the entirely unfamiliar military training, endured without serious complaint the mud, the exposure and the horrors of the French and Flanders battlefields, and won from the world a renewed recognition of the undiminished excellence of the incomparable British infantry. The battalions which won for Canada so high a place among the confederates of the Empire were not composed mainly of the bold, bad men of the alfresco action. They came from the peaceful law-abiding sections of our people who turned from their ordinary avocations to meet the urgent need of the Empire in the same old spirit as their fathers who laid the foundations of this Dominion. The development of the Empire and Canada is an urgent need. With out a vigorous immigration policy there will be overcrowding and unemployment in Great Britain, stagnation and deterioration in Canada. Let the government by all means do everything in its power to see that immigrants obtain suitable productive work on their arrival. Let each individual among ourselves see to it that we try to help the immigrant even at some little inconvenience to ourselves and not regard him as a person to whom we can sell worthless livestock and wildcat real estate because of his ignorance. Do not, however, discourage the potential immigrant from relying on his own energy and initiative to find a method of livelihood in this country of great undeveloped resources. Put at his disposal all possible information and assistance. Then let him fend for himself as was done in the past. The growth and prosperity of Canada will not be promoted by a policy which treats the problems of a dominion and an empire in the spirit of a petty trade union.

SHOULD BACHELORS BE TAXED?

All public bodies, governments, municipalities, cities, are hard up at present. All are looking for fresh sources of revenue. As a result the old familiar proposals to tax bachelors is coming to the front again. We unreservedly support this proposal. We believe that bachelors ought to be taxed and taxed heavily. Why should the bachelor live in splendour and luxury in isolation at the expense of the rest of the community? What would become of the race if bachelorhood were to be the only mode of life? It would become extinct. We should be like the great auk or the dodo—more fully to the prospect of the centuries. Look at the splendid time the bachelors have. They don't have to keep up a house. They go out and come in when they like without invitation or question. They have nobody to order them about, and spend their money on spring sales and fall bargain counters. They do not have to attend to the furnace and carry out the ashes in cold winter weather. They are signed for by hundreds of beautiful maidens. Who sighs for a husband? Nobody. They never have to see a hopeless deersie break pale and grey over the Eastern horizon while they parade the floor and sing in a husky and shivering voice to some squalling brat, whom only the criminal law saves from the just fate of the innocents massacred by that early pillantrypole, Herod. They should pay for these glorious immunities. They should pay through the nose. They should be taxed by the Dominion, by the Province, by the city, and— (What's this, Charlie, Cecil? What do you say? You won't print the paper if we advocate a bachelor's tax? You would rather see us ruined first? You would destroy the laborious work of years to promote your own selfish enjoyments? You stony-hearted jailers. What's that? You demand a retraction? You order us to swallow our words? You'll heat us if we don't? You're right. All right. All right. We give in. Here goes.) The proposal to tax bachelors is an iniquitous snafu. Why should the married man have yet one more advantage over his less fortunate brother? Look at the hard lot of the bachelor. He has to live in cheerless lodgings, where he is regarded as a necessary and obnoxious evil by a creeping and extortionate landlord. He has no one to love him, none to care. When he comes home in the evening he has no prattling little child with fair curly hair to climb on his knee and listen with real enjoyment to stories and jokes so ancient and time-worn that he would not dare to tell them to grown-ups. If the household arrangements and food do not suit him, he does not dare to complain and refer to the choice selection which the late mother used to provide for him. If he mislays his collar or his socks, he must replace them. He must be "Brimstone, where the devil did you put those things of mine? Can't a man leave anything in its place without getting it stolen in some corner?" They say it is selfish to remain a bachelor. Is there a single married man with a spark of truth in him who will dare to say that he did not marry just to please himself and for no other reason whatever? Everybody knows that two people can live just as cheaply and much more comfortably than one, so the bachelor does not gain anything in that way. If a war comes, he has to go and fight. He can't say he has to stay and look after his wife and children and so get a chance to save his own hide and collar the other fellow's job at the same time. If there's a dance on he has to take some predatory epistle to it and pay for her. He can't explain to her that the bank account is overdrawn and he must economize. She would cut him dead if he did. He would be a bachelor has a hard, hard lot, and is taxed of being taxed more, he should receive a substantial reduction on all taxes paid to the Dominion, the Province, and to the city. There now. At least no one can say of us that we are afraid to state our opinions on this or any other subject clearly, decisively and boldly.

ALD. ELINE RESIGNS
Ald. Gibson suggested that the Commissioners see that the Library be kept comfortable until the Library committee report on the matter. This was agreed to by the Council. The Mayor explained that Mr. McLean did not care to take up his offer for Englewood as he had been under a misapprehension with regard to the property, and Mr. Carscadden informed him that his offer of $50 an acre stood for 60 acres if he could have the land placed outside the municipality. Ald. Johns and Gibson were opposed to having the property taken out of the municipality. We would have to go before the Utility Commission to have the property taken from the municipality. Ald. Galbraith favored asking for tenders for the property. Ald. Gibson and McClure moved that the Commissioners get into touch with Mr. Carscadden, the second highest bidder on the Englewood property, find out if he still wishes to purchase, and if necessary call a special meeting of the Council to consider the agreement. Lost. Ald. Galbraith and Johns moved that tenders be asked for sale of 50 acres of the Englewood property, said tenders to be in the hands of the Secretary-Treasurer by Saturday, April 7th. Carried. Ald. Gibson and McClure moved that the following insurance agents be placed on the business assessment roll and assessed for the amounts set opposite their names:
John Percival $120.00
N. White 120.00
P. Fiddgen 50.00
John Balle 120.00
Carried.
The city solicitors wrote suggesting that Mr. Guy be paid $100.00 on account of services rendered. Ald. Gibson and Smith moved that the request of the city solicitors that Mr. Guy, the consulting engineer engaged in the "Western General" Erie Co. case, be paid $100.00 on account of services rendered, be granted, and that that sum be paid to the City. Carried.
Ald. Galbraith found fault with letters written to Camrose by Commissioner Stephenson on matters regarding city affairs. The letters were read for the benefit of the Council. The Council contended the personal opinions of the Commissioner, but the opinions were held by the majority of the Council. Ald. Gibson contended the Commissioner should not write letters throwing contempt on the members of the Council. Ald. Johns said Ald. Galbraith could bring in a motion of censure if he liked, but he would be voted down; he wanted to get down to business. Ald. Galbraith did not care to bring in such a motion. He only wanted to express his opinion. A letter was read from Mr. Welliver regarding his taxes, offering to bank collect taxes, and on all carrying charges were paid, hand balance to the city. The Council decided to have the Commissioners consult with Bank on the matter. Council adjourned at 12.20 o'clock.

SUPREME COURT SITTINGS

Supreme Court sittings for the trial of civil non-jury cases were held last week before His Lordship Mr. Justice Walsh, starting on Monday afternoon.

The first case was an action of Mrs. Annie Heyson Brown, an executrix of the late John Brown, of Armstrong, B.C., for the recovery of $1000, balance of $25,000 purchase price of a section of land, sold on Sept. 10th, 1919, to Mr. Isaac Gibson. There was a counter-claim for various amounts, the defendant Gibson alleging failure of delivery of some of the chattels enumerated in the bill of sale, and the plaintiff alleging failure to deliver certificates of pedigree of some of the cattle.

The claim of $1000 was allowed, less some of the items in the counter-claim, amounting to $225, judgment being given for $775.00, including principal and interest, with 7 1/2% of judgment costs. W. B. Payne, K.C., Red Deer, acted for Mr. W. M. Macdonald, Inuit, for defendant.

M. W. Donohy, Horn Hill, applied for divorce from his wife, formerly Miss Bradshaw, of Chilliwack, B.C., to whom he was married in 1915, and who left him in 1920. They had one child, a girl, at four years. The action was undefended, and formal evidence of the wife's alleged misconduct was admitted. An order was granted for absolute in three months, the custody of the child to go to the father. Mr. J. R. McClure for the plaintiff.

Mr. J. T. Rogers, of Inuit, sued for payment of a $500 note, with interest, representing balance due to him on an account of $2000, for goods supplied to Messrs. McCabe & Lee, contractors, on the Dickson drainage ditch. Lee counter-claimed that he bought the ditching machine in the States for $8000 and had leased it to McCabe & Lee for $500 per month. The partnership was proved by the evidence of three witnesses. Judgment was given against both of the defendants for $647.40 with costs. W. B. Payne, K.C., of Payne & Graham, Red Deer, and Mr. W. W. Macdonald, of Inuit, appeared for the plaintiff.

A Hold-up Bear

By Franklin Welles Calkins

The two Ross boys, Bob and Minner, had helped to load the last sack of the piled-up ricks of potatoes that had been the brigades of the potatoes along the creek. As a highway gate, it was used upon two big trucks with trailers. The brothers watched, each with a sense of satisfaction, the last of their big potato crop depart. These would complete the delivery of the potatoes to the city. The twenty tons of potatoes that the Ross fields had yielded in eighteen days was late in August; it was now noon and hot. Sweaty and tired, the boys presently took their way toward the ranch house. Within a couple of hundred yards they turned aside to cross a nearly dry creek bed and gather each an armful of cantaloupes. The melons were growing with other vegetables in a field garden that lay beside a fence in the rear of the ranch buildings.
The Circle X field and yard fences had been built to keep out intruders. Now and then whistled or whistled leaped the last wires to reach the alfalfa meadows, but the dogs soon sent them flying out again. But on this visit to their truck patch Bob and Minner discovered that undisturbed destruction had visited them overnight. Melons, crushed and partly eaten, uprooted cabbages, beets and other green stuff lay strewn over half an acre of ground.
"Bears down from Yellowstone Park again," Bob grumbled. "Don't dare shoot them either."
"No," said Bob, "not till we know for sure."
Ranchmen and settlers thereabouts were bothered occasionally by bears that, domesticated, came at Yellowstone Park, hung about their premises, foraging or begging for food. But people were warned not to attack them unless the beasts should take to killing pigs and poultry.
Major Ross, the boys' father, was then overseas, and their mother was serving at a Mayland hospital. Bob and Minner and the ranch hands, Bill Holcomb and Tate Springer, had sole charge of the Circle X half section of irrigated land and the twelve sections of rough hill land. The brothers were too young for military service, and Bill and Tate were too old. Bob and Minner managed to trail the bears to a place in the channel of the creek by which they had come and gone. Those knowing beasts learn to steer around barbed-wire fences as they do round cactus or briar thickets. They had pawed a trough under the wires that crossed the dry bed. After a dinner of beef sandwiches the Circle X cantaloupes, the brothers set to work and by driving sharpened posts and affixing a meshwork of barbed wire at all fence crossings of the creek made sure that the bears would have no further chance of digging under.
Tate and Bill had been out for several days making an exchange of cattle and horses between the Circle X and nearby ranches preparatory to feeding stores for shipment. The two line riders had both the ranch dogs with them; there was therefore no chance of a night alarm in case of raid on the ranch premises.
Not until the fourth morning after the boys had staked and wired the loopholes of the bed of the creek did they again find signs of the intruders. Sometime before sunrise the animals had tried to crawl under the wires of the bog yard, and there were fresh marks of claws on the sides of a pole chicken house that was closed and barred at dark. "The beasts had also traveled along the line fence and had twice crossed the creek, looking for a way back to the melons." "Now," said Minner as the two came to the end of their tracking, "now you see we've got to get those silvers." Bob grinned but said nothing. Some two hours later they loaded the single ranch motor truck with cantaloupes and set out upon the county highway to do some selling and some needed trading at Last Chance. About three miles from home they were passing over a narrow bush-grown trail near the bottom of a dip, and Minner who was driving, had changed his gear to "low" in order to make an opposite rise when into the road ahead stepped the largest bear either of the brothers had ever seen. "Minner" set, the brakes instantly, and the truck stopped with its nose within a few feet of a motionless silverpelt. The bear reared up on its hind legs and stretched out its paws.

"A hold-up from Yellowstone!" exclaimed Minner.
"Guess it is," replied Bob, and reaching over the back of the seat, gathered some melons into his lap. "Come on, old chub," he said invitingly.

The bear promptly ambled round to his side of the truck, snatched a cantaloupe out of its paws. A cantaloupe the size of a man's head the huge beast crushed and nibbled in a twinkling. Then Bob tossed out four more melons. "Back up and get out of here," he said.
"Yes, but look up, yonder!" cried Minner as he threw his gears into reverse. Bob looked and on the left bank of the creek, where the brushy gray bear had concealed in the bush, peering hungrily and savagely toward the truck, stood a second bear, which yanked away from Minner's machine halfway up the back grade and took a flying start. "A dollar for the second silverpelt," said Minner. "That fellow ahead had better look out!"

The lightly loaded truck took the rise at good speed. The bear did not interfere, and Minner stopped at the top. The brothers were in time to see the second silverpelt rush from cover down at the gubbling bear before the feeder lost no time in leaping to meet the newcomer. He cuffed aside the other animal, which was slightly smaller, and then returned to his side of the truck, snatched a cantaloupe and ate it. After the brothers had reached town and were peddling their melons, which was a rarity in Last Chance, an old cowboy named Ben Chances, Ben halted before their truck for a "feed." To him they told the story of the bear hold-up from Yellowstone. "You fellows kill those two first chance ye get," he admonished them. "They're an old hold-up from Yellowstone and his wild mate, the worst for stock killin' an' that of, he will never get back to the park to winter." When they reached home Minner was for killing the two rifles and going on a grizzly hunt the next morning. But his father, however, could not allow an old ranchman, he said, might be mistaken. They found Tate Springer at the storehouse and he offered them an extra supply of "grub" and to tell the brothers to get ready for a big home yard.

When Tate heard about the silverpelt he shook his head and observed, "as old Last Chance Ben said, you ought to be ready to shoot on sight next time. You know those grizzlies ain't like the Yellowstone silvers. They're cunning as hell and sometimes make calves. Once a pair of silverpelt will come down to a ranch and eat your calves. Don't get too close to 'em to begin your shootin'!"
For several days the boys worked and kept a keen lookout for the silverpelt. Then one morning just after daylight a tremendous racket, at the horse shed raised them. The sound thought the mind of each as he jerked on his khaki breeches—Old Hostile, a seven-year-old horse, fourteen hundred pounds and a hater of all the breed of bronchos, had broken loose in the shed and was punishing the ponies. The roar from the big horse's throat, the frightened squeals of the bronchos and a heavy pounding of hoofs made the racket a sound like a small hurricane.
Minner, ever quicker of action, reached the shed first. He flung one of the doors open and sprang inside. He found himself confronting Old Hostile, a seven-year-old horse, a little to one side; his heels were pounding the oak top of a high manger, and he was rearing on his hind legs, his teeth were bared, and his eyes were gleaming wickedly. The beast was waiting for a chance to leap under the flying heels at the vitals of his big enemy.
Old Hostile had evidently torn loose from his halter when the bear had crawled in through an open hay window where alfalfa had been pitched inside. The scent of a sack of ground meal against a heap of hay had evidently enticed the horse. Without a moment's delay, Minner seized a stout four-tined fork beside the doorway and pricked Old Hostile's side. Then as the bear reared and he plunged headlong like a trained football player and drove the four tines of his fork into the half-reared chest. The four spearlike tines entered among the short ribs, and one of the tines broke in the force of the stroke. Yet the bear came on, striking and fighting savagely to get at his new antagonist. Minner backed away steadily, guiding his course toward the open doorway.
He was within a few feet of that opening when Bob ran inside. The brother jumped in front of Minner and assisted in one further plunge of the tines into the animal's vitals. But Bob was too close to the bear, and stroke of his paw hurled him half-stunned against a wall near the door. With a curious half-moaning growl the animal showed forward again to get at the other silverpelt. Minner was thrust outside. His heels struck against the door and flung him up his back, and the huge silverpelt fell at full length upon him. The sharp thins had reached the bear's heart, but in its death agony the creature's teeth and paws worked convulsively. Minner's punishment was so severe that he fainted before he could get to the park to winter. When they reached home Minner was for killing the two rifles and going on a grizzly hunt the next morning. But his father, however, could not allow an old ranchman, he said, might be mistaken. They found Tate Springer at the storehouse and he offered them an extra supply of "grub" and to tell the brothers to get ready for a big home yard.

When Tate heard about the silverpelt he shook his head and observed, "as old Last Chance Ben said, you ought to be ready to shoot on sight next time. You know those grizzlies ain't like the Yellowstone silvers. They're cunning as hell and sometimes make calves. Once a pair of silverpelt will come down to a ranch and eat your calves. Don't get too close to 'em to begin your shootin'!"

For several days the boys worked and kept a keen lookout for the silverpelt. Then one morning just after daylight a tremendous racket, at the horse shed raised them. The sound thought the mind of each as he jerked on his khaki breeches—Old Hostile, a seven-year-old horse, fourteen hundred pounds and a hater of all the breed of bronchos, had broken loose in the shed and was punishing the ponies. The roar from the big horse's throat, the frightened squeals of the bronchos and a heavy pounding of hoofs made the racket a sound like a small hurricane.
Minner, ever quicker of action, reached the shed first. He flung one of the doors open and sprang inside. He found himself confronting Old Hostile, a seven-year-old horse, a little to one side; his heels were pounding the oak top of a high manger, and he was rearing on his hind legs, his teeth were bared, and his eyes were gleaming wickedly. The beast was waiting for a chance to leap under the flying heels at the vitals of his big enemy.
Old Hostile had evidently torn loose from his halter when the bear had crawled in through an open hay window where alfalfa had been pitched inside. The scent of a sack of ground meal against a heap of hay had evidently enticed the horse. Without a moment's delay, Minner seized a stout four-tined fork beside the doorway and pricked Old Hostile's side. Then as the bear reared and he plunged headlong like a trained football player and drove the four tines of his fork into the half-reared chest. The four spearlike tines entered among the short ribs, and one of the tines broke in the force of the stroke. Yet the bear came on, striking and fighting savagely to get at his new antagonist. Minner backed away steadily, guiding his course toward the open doorway.
He was within a few feet of that opening when Bob ran inside. The brother jumped in front of Minner and assisted in one further plunge of the tines into the animal's vitals. But Bob was too close to the bear, and stroke of his paw hurled him half-stunned against a wall near the door. With a curious half-moaning growl

CANNED FOODS SAFE AND WHOLESOME

Sir William Wilcox, scientific adviser to the home office in the British Empire, has recently stated that it would have been brought to your notice if cases had occurred during the war when the food was poisonous. It was in fact, the food was safe and wholesome. It was in fact, the food was safe and wholesome. It was in fact, the food was safe and wholesome.

YOUTH MUST BE GIVEN TIME

It has always been plain to thinking people that many of the knotty problems of life are in some mysterious way straightened out by the flight of time. It is only when we are young that we are so much troubled by the problems of life. It is only when we are young that we are so much troubled by the problems of life.

Then we are told when angry to count one hundred before we speak. Counting one hundred takes a minute and a minute is better measure for wrath than compulsion or argument, whether from within or from without. Again, if we are servant, we know that in the process of learning, time is often of vital importance. We say, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again," but often we might better say, "If at first you don't succeed, wait, wait a while." An idea seldom takes the fortress of the mind by storm, however violent the attacks; rather, it comes by degrees, and it must have time to sink in, as a gentle rain sinks into the earth.

Time works wonders with aged people, but works even greater with children. We labor in vain to change an undisciplined state of mind in them, and presently discover that it has disappeared of its own accord, more because the child has outgrown it. The idea that we have tried unsuccessfully to make him grasp, the performance that all our efforts failed to draw from him, becomes easy and attractive as soon as he has had time to grow up to it.

The magic power so long recognized as inherent in the element of time, modern science has explained as the result of the working in of the conscious mind. It is a very important part of our thinking done without our being aware of it, and requires much time to accomplish. We ought to allow for it, if we are in our dealings with other people, with ourselves, and above all, with time. If we fail for lack of intelligent co-operation with the wizard Time, we have only ourselves to blame.

NURSES ADVISE

Zam-Buk, because they have proved that it does what is claimed for it. Miss E. L. Dorey, graduate nurse, of 3220 Michigan Ave., Chicago, says: "I have a patient who suffered terribly with piles. Zam-Buk is the only remedy that gave her relief."
"I have used Zam-Buk myself for the same ailment, also for sore and hemorrhoids, and have the greatest confidence in it."
